CERTIFICATE.

I CERTIFY that this edition of the Psalter has been compared with the Standard Copy, as required by resolution of the General Convention, and that it conforms thereto.

SAMUEL HART,

Custodian of the Standard Book of Common Prayer.

January 1, 1897.

The following editions of the CHURCH PSALTER are published:
The "People's Edition," words only (Pointed Prayer Book).
The "Choristers' Edition," words and music.
The "Organ Edition," words and music, with organ registration.

PREFACE.

THE General Convention of 1892, which witnessed the completion of the revision of the Book of Common Prayer, took action to bring an important portion of that Book into more general musical use by the appointment of a Commission of "three Bishops, three Presbyters, and three Laymen, to prepare a system of pointing for the Canticles and Gloria Patri and the whole Book of Psalms, the same to be reported to the next General Convention for its approval and recommendation to the use of the Church." Subsequent action of the Convention empowered the Commission to make a pointing of the Canticles and Occasional Anthems, and to print the same as an appendix in the Hymnal, without waiting for further action on the part of a later Convention.

The Commission as constituted by the Convention consisted of the Bishops of Maine, Pittsburgh, and Georgia; the Rev. J. S. B. Hodges, D. D., the Rev. Charles L. Hutchins, and the Rev. George S. Bennitt; Mr. George William Warren, organist of S. Thomas's Church, New York, Mr. George Edward Stubbs, organist of S. Agnes's Chapel, New York, and Mr. Minton Pyne, organist of S. Mark's Church, Philadelphia.

The result of the Commission's labours on the Canticles and Occasional Anthems was incorporated in all the editions of the new Hymnal which came into use early in 1894, and has been almost universally adopted throughout the Church. The Commission continued their work during the next two years, until they were enabled, by unanimous action, to present to the Convention of 1895 a pointing of the complete Psalter. In making its report to the Convention, the Commission express the hope that as this pointing "has the unanimous approval of the Commission, it may also have the approval and endorsement of the Church as represented in this Convention." They say further: They are "aware that such approval and endorsement must be based chiefly upon a confidence in the competency of the Commission, and upon an assurance that they have given sufficient attention and care to their work. . . . With respect to the competency of the Commission, the general satisfaction given by their work upon the Canticles may perhaps afford sufficient evidence; and with regard to the degree of care and diligence bestowed upon this later work, your Commission beg to say that they have spared no pains to make the result satisfactory to all who approve of the principle by which, chiefly, they have been guided in the construction of their general scheme of pointing." "That principle or postulate is that the pointing of the Psalms for musical use in public worship should be, first of all, such as to fulfil the requirements of correct and intelligent reading. The construction of the ordinary chant to which the pointing must be adapted does not admit of a strict adherence to this rule in all cases, but it should be studiously adhered to so far as practicable. In the prosecution of their work, according to this principle, your Commission have had constantly before them, and have constantly consulted the best and most widely used of the English pointed Psalters, and their own pointing has, in every verse of the whole Psalter, the authority of at least a majority of the editors thus consulted."

The approval of both Houses of the Convention was no less unanimous than had been the action of the Commission; and a resolution was adopted that "the pointing of the Psalter presented by the Commission be set forth as the authorized pointing for use in this Church."

PREFACE.

In preparing this musical edition of the Psalter the editor's chief object has been to make available for use the work of the Commission, believing that in this lies the only prospect of anything like uniformity in singing the Psalter in the American Church. The musical use of the Psalms is rapidly increasing, and it is only through uniformity of pointing that the people can have their proper and rightful share in this beautiful portion of the Church's worship.

In the selection of the chants the editor has sought to give those whose value has been tested by long use, with some of more recent composition, whose merits will be at once recognized. Both single and double chants are given, and they should be used according to the character and construction of the Psalm. For a few Psalms which invite more elaborate treatment than the ordinary chant, special settings have been given, which may be used as seems expedient to the choir-master.

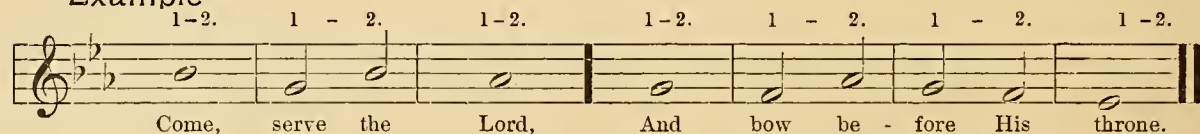

From an excellent paper on Chanting by the Rev. Dr. J. S. B. Hodges, the editor is permitted to quote the following, which may be of service to choirs in the use of this Psalter:

"The ordinary chant consists of two parts. In the first part are four notes; in the second, six. Take, for instance, the melody of the following single chant:

"Now this should be sung in strict time, faster or slower, as the case may be, but preserving the proportion of the length of the several notes. This is easy when there is only one syllable to one note.

Example

"This may be considered the chant proper, and in regard to it there is no difficulty whatever. But before the chant proper there comes a recitation of a greater or less number of words, which of course will require a variable length of time. Now all will become perfectly easy if the rule laid down by the editors of the Cathedral Psalter is clearly understood, viz.:

"On reaching the accented syllable, and beginning with it, the music of the chant commences, in strict time, the upright strokes (in the pointed Psalter) corresponding to the bars (in the printed music)."

"That is the turning point. The accented syllable is simply the beginning of the regular time of the chant, of the first bar of the chant. It does not mean that the syllable is to be long dwelt upon, or that it is to be sung louder than the rest, but only that it is the point of beginning of the steady time of the chanting. If this be distinctly understood, what follows will be easy.

"This accented syllable may be the only one before the first bar,—as in the example just given. In that case it is to be held just the length of one bar.

"But there may be, between this accented syllable and the first bar, one, two, three, four, or even (rarely) five other syllables. How are they to be treated? Simply by dividing the time of the whole bar between the two, three, four, or five syllables assigned to it, giving an emphasis, or accent, to the accented syllable, as in the following examples:

I said I will take	heed	to my ways:
Like as the	hart de-	sireth the waterbrooks:
I waited	patiently	for the Lord:
Blessed is he that con-sidereth the		poor and needy:
The Lord hath	chastened and cor-	rected me:

PREFACE.

"Here it will be seen that the bar beginning with the accented syllable contains from one to five syllables. How are they to be treated?

"Not by dwelling on the accented syllable, but by a proper division of the time between all the syllables, as in good reading, as may be seen by the following examples:

I said I will take heed to my ways:

Like as the hart de - sir - eth the waterbrooks:

I waited pá - tient - ly for the Lord:

Blessed is he that con - sîd - er - eth the poor and needy:

The Lord hath châst - en - ed and cor - rect - ed me:

"This really seems to give the key to the whole matter. Let all the syllables after (and including) the accented syllable have the time of one bar properly distributed among them, not necessarily dwelling on the accented syllable. The recitative part of the chant is of course to be sung clearly and 'after the manner of distinct' and good 'reading.' Arriving at the accented syllable, the time of the chant commences, and all will go on smoothly."

EXPLANATION MARKS.

An asterisk (*) marks the place for taking breath. Commas should be observed only as in good reading.

Can. (Cantoris) is the Gospel or north side of the choir.

Dec. (Decani) is the Epistle or south side.

Full signifies that both sides of the choir are to sing together, though not necessarily loud.

The antiphonal construction of many of the Psalms requires that each half of the verse should be sung, unless otherwise indicated, by the Decani and Cantoris respectively. But these marks (Dec. and Can.), which will be found in many of the chants, need not be strictly observed should the choirmaster think it advisable to disregard them.

The direction, "2nd part," is of force only when a double chant is used, and denotes that the verse to which it is prefixed is to be sung to the second half of the chant. In some Psalms it will be found more than once, because a particular verse is more closely connected in character with the one that precedes than with the one which follows it. (See Psalm 103.) If preferred, however, such Psalms can be sung in the usual manner.

PREFACE.

The inverted period (·) divides the words of a bar into two parts of equal duration. Either of two modes of dividing the words — into two and one, or one and two — might be equally good; but it is important that all who sing shall divide in the same way.

Verses which are preceded by an upright line (as in Psalm 8, verses 1 and 9) are to be sung in unison, the accompaniment being in harmony.

Any mark of expression continues its influence until some other mark is given.

PREFACE TO THE ORGAN EDITION.

In putting forth this edition of the Church Psalter the editor desires to express his great obligation to Dr. A. H. Mann, organist of the University of Cambridge, who has most kindly provided the organ registration. Dr. Mann has also furnished the following notes:

The Directions given in the margins are merely general, leaving the more minute details to be decided by the organists themselves, according to the strength of their choirs, and the size of their organs.

I. When "Choir and Ped. to Gt." is given, the "Ped. to Gt." will obviously include the Ped. to Choir.

II. Occasionally the hands are required to be playing on different Manuals. The presence of the word "Solo" in the marginal direction will show the effect required. For instance:

(a) Psalm 112, verse 5, the direction is:

"R. H., G. St'p. Dia.

L. H., Sw. and Ped."

This means that the right hand will play chords (or double parts) on the Great Organ Stop Dia. (or some such stop), while the left hand will also play chords on the Swell organ to support both accompaniment and singers.

(b) In Psalm 108, verse 7, the direction is:

"R. H., Ch. and Ped.

L. H., Solo G. Dia."

This means that the necessary accompaniment will be played by the right hand on the Choir Organ, while the left hand will play a solo (either by strengthening one of the already written parts, or an extemporary counterpoint) on the Diapason or Great Organ.

III. In the "unaccompanied" verses it will be much better for the organist to start his choir by playing the first chord or so than leaving them to start themselves.

The fourth system of music shows the harmony and parts by sides for verses 13-17. It consists of a vocal line and a piano accompaniment. The vocal line is written on a single staff with a treble clef and a key signature of one sharp. The piano accompaniment is written on two staves (treble and bass clefs) with a key signature of one sharp. The melody is simple and hymn-like, with a final cadence at the end of the phrase.
